

MIDGET BANDIT SLEW THREE MEN, SAY THE POLICE

Inspector Says Forsbrey Is Most Dangerous Criminal
They Ever Caught.

GEM DEALER, A VICTIM.

Walked Into His Shop Yesterday and Opened Fire Without Warning.

Reynold Forsbrey, who yesterday murdered Morris Schwartzkopf, a jeweler, at No. 8 Delancey street, and later in the day probably fatally shot Maxwell Katz, at No. 25 Cooper Square, to-day was remanded to the Coroner by Magistrate Krotel. He was held without bail by Coroner Hillenstien and sent to the Tombs.

"That man is the most murderous and dangerous criminal the police of New York ever dealt with," said Police Inspector Hughes to-day, as he looked at the slight figure of the bandit beside him. "He is less than twenty-five years old, yet we know that he has killed two men, shot several others, and of his twenty-five years has spent six years in the penitentiary."

Forsbrey, who still sticks to the name of Charles Wilson, which he gave when arrested after his murderous assault upon Katz, is a "dope fiend." He is less than five feet, five inches in height, and weighs less than 125 pounds. He has the pasty face and shifty eye of the "hop fiend," and the trigger finger and unerring aim of a desperate gunman. Too small to engage in physical contest, he resorts always to guileplay. His homicidal mania manifesting itself yesterday when he murdered Schwartzkopf in a dispute over the price of repairing his watch, and later in the day shot Katz in an attempt to hold up the United Cigars Company's store at No. 25 Cooper Square.

ADMIT HE SHOT KATZ, BUT WON'T TELL WHY.

In the lineup at Police Headquarters to-day John Berler of No. 6 Delancey street picked Forsbrey out of a dozen men as the man he saw murder the jeweler. Despite this identification and the dying identification by Schwartzkopf, Forsbrey denied he killed the jeweler, though he admitted he knew him well. He did admit, however, that he had shot Katz, and when asked why he did so he shrugged his shoulders and laughed.

Forsbrey comes from a well to do Brooklyn family, his father, a contracting plumber, owning a handsome home in DeKalb avenue. In 1901, when only fourteen years of age, the murderer was sent to the House of Refuge for fifteen months for forgery. In 1905, at Fort Payne, Ala., he served nine months in the Albany County penitentiary for petty larceny. In 1907, under the name of Frank Robinson, he went to the Elmira Reformatory for an attempted burglary in Brooklyn. In 1908, under the name of George Clark, he was sent from Brooklyn to Sing Sing for two years and six months for burglary. Forsbrey admitted to-day to the police that he took part in the hold-up of the store of Walter Messerwitz, a Flatbush avenue, Brooklyn, haberdasher, on Feb. 27 of this year, in which Messerwitz was murdered. His companions in that crime were Frank Redmond and James Cassidy. Forsbrey denied, however, that he had a hand in the killing. He said he had later had a fight with his companions because they "held out" on his share of the $23 they took from the dead man's body.

POLICE CONNECT HIM WITH A THIRD MURDER.

The police further charge that the boyish bandit, who is one of the best gunfighters in the Jack Zelig gang, was implicated in the murder of John Whitford, a retired saloonkeeper, in Sheepshead Bay two years ago, and in a criminal assault upon a woman there at the same time. He admitted to-day he was in Sheepshead Bay at the time these crimes were committed, but denied that he was implicated in them.

Gunman Gets a Year.

Frank Martin, one of the trio who went to Coney Island a few days after "Big Jack" Zelig was shot in front of the Criminal Courts Building to raise a defense fund for Charles Torti, who did the shooting, pleaded guilty to attempted assault upon Louis Gold before County Judge Fortis of St. Lawrence County, presiding to-day over the criminal branch of the County Court in Brooklyn. He was sentenced to one year in the penitentiary. Martin's two companions pleaded not guilty shortly after their arrest at Coney Island and are awaiting trial.

BURGLAR SHOOTS RICHMOND FARMER AT DOOR OF HIS HOME

Frederick Benker, Seventy-two, With Jaw Shattered, Waits Hours for Help.

Frederick Benker, seventy-two years old, of Old Town road, Mariner's Harbor, Richmond Borough, with his jaw shattered by a bullet and another bullet in his right shoulder and fearing to go out lest he faint on the road, had to wait for hours this morning for daylight.

He had been shot by a burglar who had sought to enter his home about 1:30 o'clock. Benker was alone in the house last night, his wife being away. Hearing a noise at the front door, he went there and found a man seeking to force an entry. When the would-be intruder saw Benker he fired at him through the half opened door and then fled. One bullet hit Benker in the jaw and the other in the right shoulder.

The aged farmer was stunned for a time, then he realized that if he went out to summon aid he might collapse and his helpless on the road. He dressed the wounds and then fled. He then sought help from a neighbor. He was taken to St. Vincent's Hospital at Livingston. Owing to his age the wounds are serious.

"Queen Rose of the Rosebud Garden of Girls" is not only a poetic phrase; it is descriptive, and the "Queen Rose" must have a complexion like the fairest rose leaf.

It is not always easy, however, to preserve the clear rose tint of the skin during the scorching heat of summer. But there is one sure treatment for sunburn.

Before your game of tennis or golf, before your dip in the ocean or the long motor ride, be sure to rub Violet Cerate well into the skin. Then immediately upon your return indoors anoint your face, arms and neck with Cream of Cucumber and Roses and half a dozen hot towels, used in quick succession. After the hot towels, a bit of ice in the corner of the towel should be passed quickly over the face. Cream of Cucumber and Roses should again be used after this application, the face being kept thoroughly moistened with it for five or ten minutes.

Riker's Violet Cerate is a pure, graceless cream that soothes and whitens the skin, heals and builds up the tissues. It is the only cream that will combine perfectly with water, so is especially suitable before the ocean bath. The jar, 50c.
